CEU.com Launches Automated Exam Proctoring

New web-based service eliminates wasted paper and wasted time

Old Saybrook, Conn., December 2, 2007: Many insurance professionals work in states that require continuing education exams to be supervised by a proctor, whose job is to certify that tests are taken properly in his or her presence. Web-based continuing education has greatly improved the convenience of the CE process, but the requirements of proctoring have always been a hindrance to real efficiency. Forms had to be printed out, signed by proctors, and faxed to the test providers. Follow-up calls were usually necessary to make sure the forms got into the right hands. The whole process was a waste of paper and a waste of time.

CEU.com is pleased to announce that it has automated the proctoring process. Printing, faxing, calling, and waiting are no longer necessary. When an insurance professional takes a proctored course with CEU.com, his or her proctor creates a username and password at the start of the exam process. When the student is finished with the test, the proctor logs in to certify that the test was completed without assistance. The entire process is web-based and instantaneous.

CEU.com's online proctoring is now available in all states except Arkansas and Nebraska that require exams to be proctored.

"We are always striving to make the continuing education process more convenient for insurance professionals," said Bruce MacMillian, president of CEU.com. "Online proctoring is a huge step in that direction. It eliminates several steps that were, quite simply, a waste of time."
